CREATING SPACE THAT WORKS

creating a space that works — not only a workspace

By looking at the workplace and the way we work we can see that the workplace is changing. And it's changing fast. Mobile technology enables us to choose not only when but also where we want to work. Work is not only desk bound like it traditionally was. Nowadays we find a combination of traditionally planned desk workstations work well alongside more casual collaborative workspaces.

WORKSTATION VS. WORKSPACE

The individual desk is not dead just yet, we still like to sit down, get our head down and concentrate on getting the task in hand done. But that is just one part of the story. Businesses thrive on motivated employees, brilliant ideas, and a positive atmosphere.

CREATING THE RIGHT SPACE

Understanding what employees need is crucial, because work has more than only one style. Spaces need to be versatile, adaptable and engaging to allow for different kinds of activities, like individual work, social interaction, group learning and collaboration. It's about providing the right combination of spaces to suit your workforce. The best ideas are still created by people sticking their heads together. Interaction between colleagues is key. So why not create a physical setting that stimulates exactly this? Casual seating and break out areas form perfect space for communication, networking and collaboration. Comfortable seating islands throughout the office offer a more spontaneous meeting point than booking a meeting room. Spaces that don't look and feel like a corporate office, provide a change of scene to let ideas and creativity flow.

WORKING IN PERFECT BALANCE

It is also important to offer a counterpoint to the demanding workplace where phones ring, emails flood the inbox and the to-do list gets longer and longer. Well-designed seating landscapes can offer space to take time out, relax and recharge batteries.

SHOW THAT YOU VALUE YOUR STAFF

We spend most of our day at work, one more reason to make the workplace as appealing as possible. Well thought out spaces, that maybe blurring the lines between commercial office and living room with lots of individuality, show that you value your staff. The quality of the workplace becomes increasingly important to staff and it's another way to attract and keep the best people on board.

space to present & learn

space to meet & discuss

space to relax & recharge

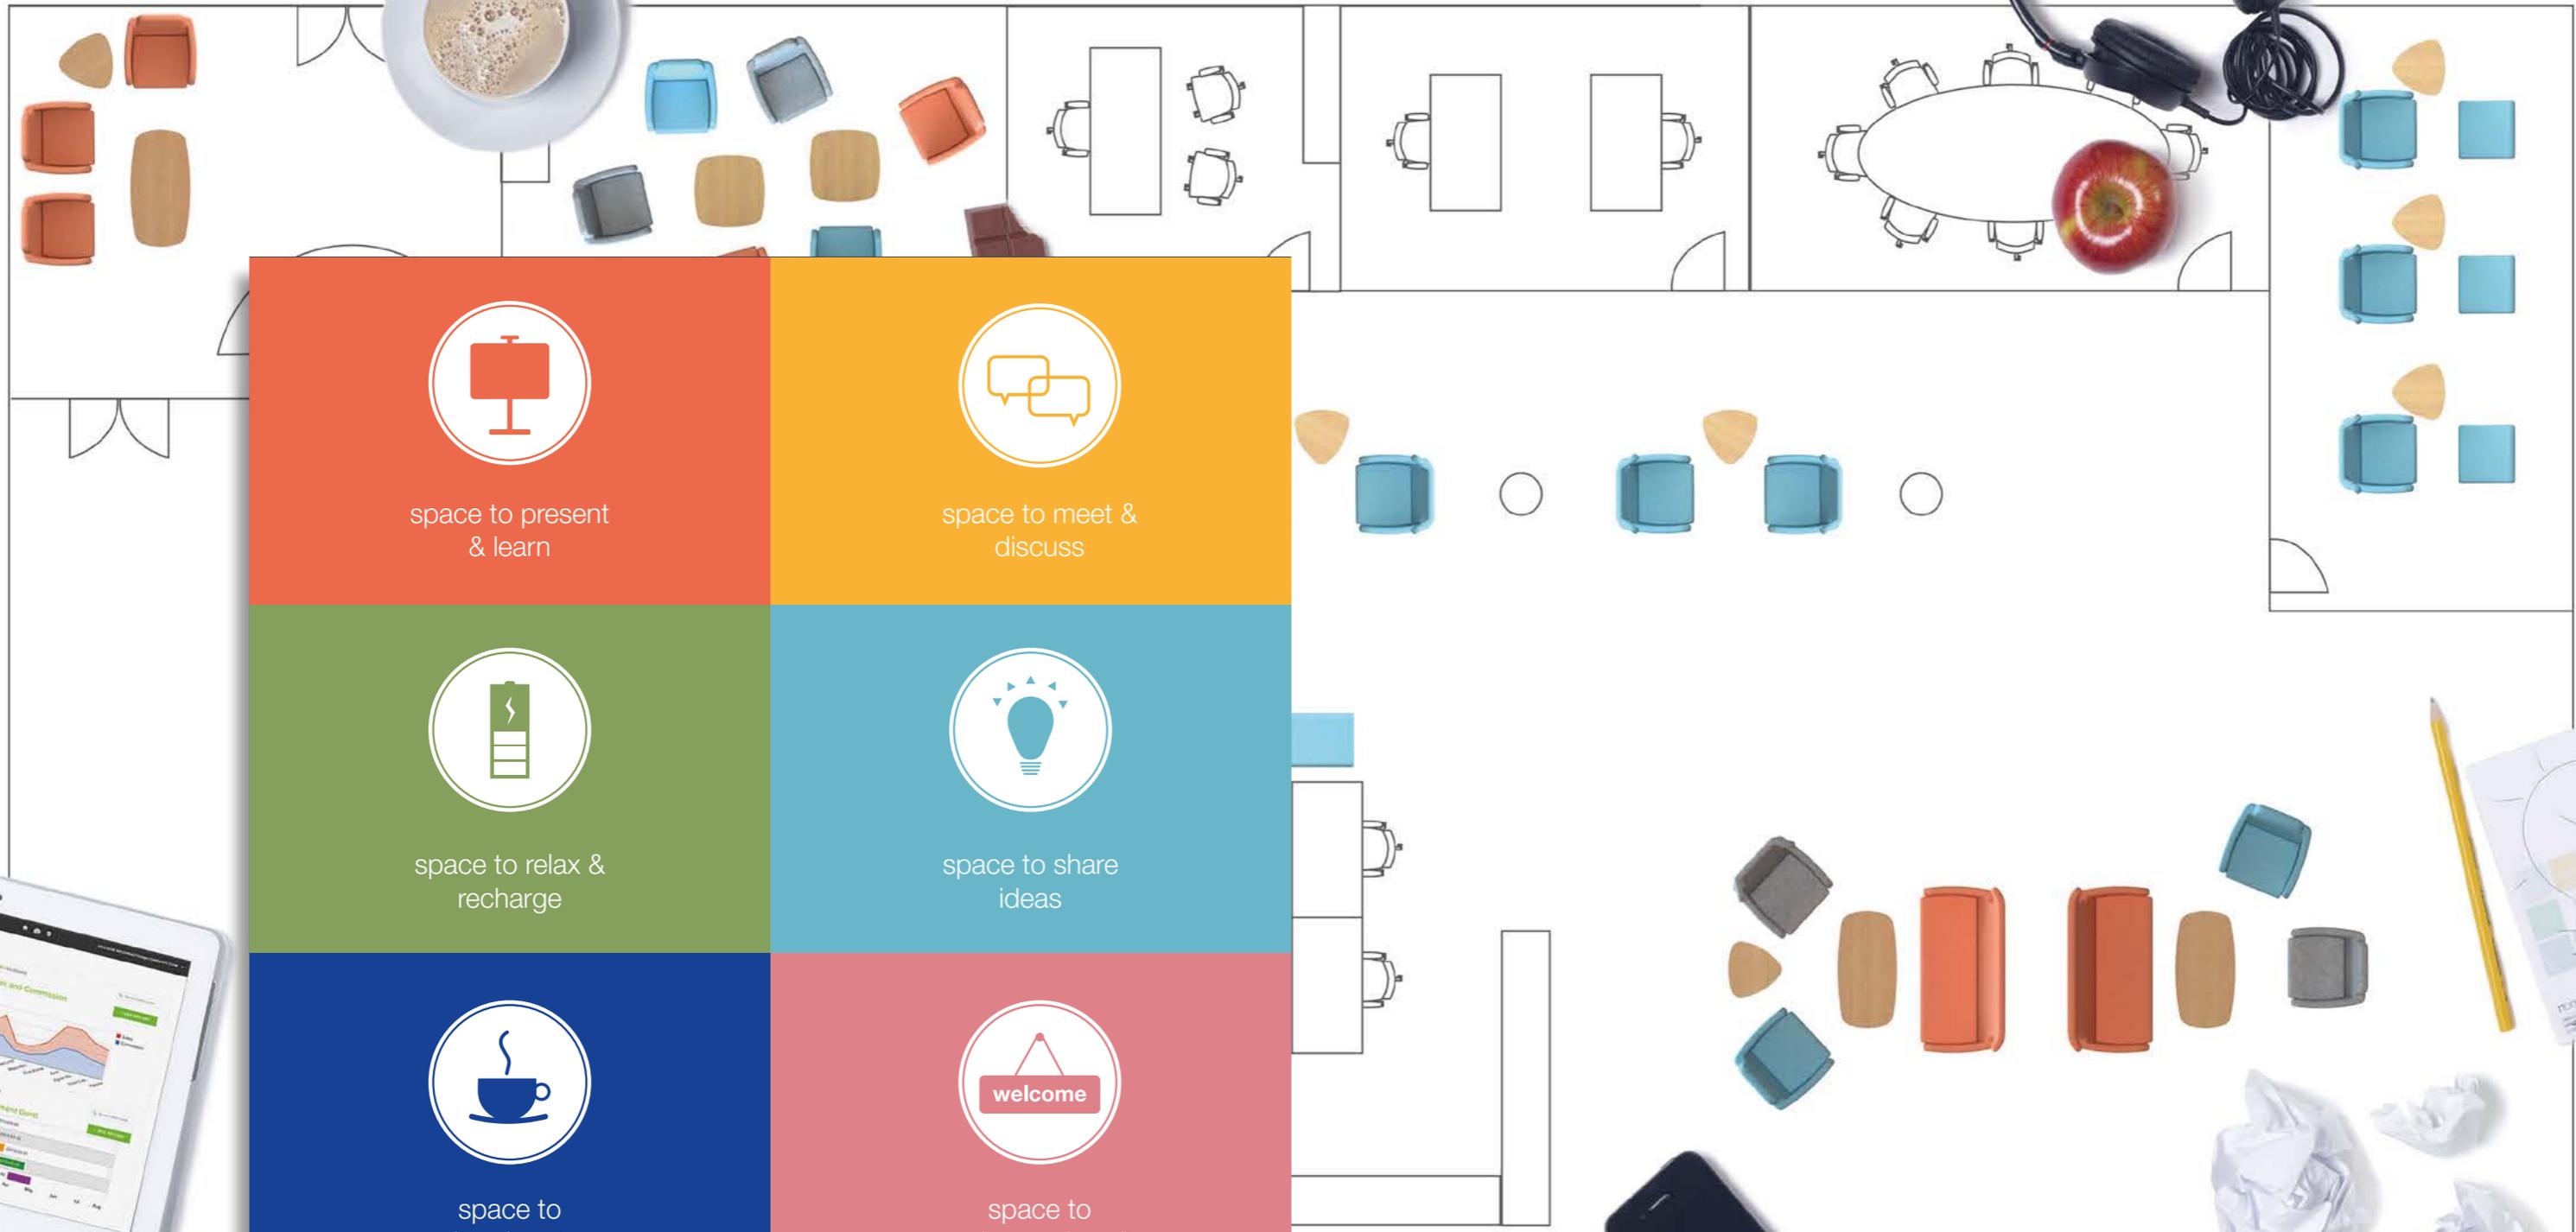

space to share ideas

space to break out

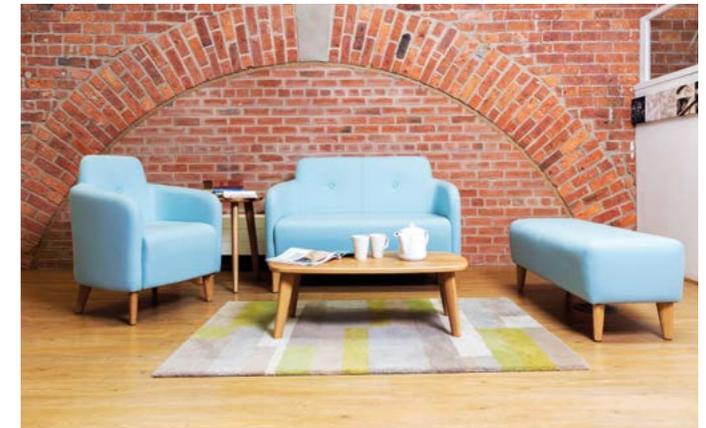

space to welcome & wait

TEAM SPACE
